Festively chase away chills

Cooler temperatures have arrived to coincide with what many characterize as the most festive time of year. The period from Thanksgiving to New Year's Day is filled with major holidays and many opportunities for friends and family to gather together in good cheer.

Naturally, spending time indoors in close company with others increases the likelihood that people will encounter the sniffles and sneezes that are symptomatic of viral illnesses. Many people insist a hot toddy can help soothe the throat, open the nose and help a person get rest. There are various iterations of a hot toddy, but author Gustave Flaubert's "French Hot Toddy" delivers flavors that pair nicely with November and December events. It's so delicious that it can be served at any holiday gathering, or just to feel better if the common cold is an unwanted visitor. Enjoy Flaubert's take, courtesy of "How to Drink Like a Writer" (Apollo Publishers) by Margaret Kaplan.

Gustave Flaubert's French Hot Toddy

Serves 1

4 ounces apple cider
2 ounces calvados
2 ounces apricot brandy
2 ounces heavy cream
Ground cinnamon for garnishing

In a small saucepan, heat apple cider until warm. Remove from heat. Add calvados and apricot brandy, stirring to combine. Pour into a heatproof glass. Pouring in a circular motion, slowly add cream, allowing it to settle on top. Garnish with the cinnamon.

Christmas Greetings! "And Save the Date Oct. 2-3, 2026".

A less traditional take on a family dinner staple

Fried foods are often characterized as guilty pleasures. Though frying might not be the healthiest way to make a meal, it's hard to argue against the flavor profile of fried foods.

Air frying can produce meals that call to mind the familiar flavors of fried foods and do so in a far healthier way. This holiday season, hosts can look to air frying as a means to crafting flavorful meals without a lot of the negatives of traditional frying. That's even possible with traditional family staples like roast beef. With that in mind, hosts can try their hands at this recipe for air-fried "Roast Beef" courtesy of Lines+Angles.

Roast Beef

Roast beef, medium, is not only a food. It is a philosophy.

Makes 4 to 6 servings

1 2-pound beef roast, trimmed
2 tablespoons olive oil
Flaked sea salt
Freshly ground mixed peppercorns

- Preheat air fryer to 360 F. Rub beef roast with olive oil and liberally season with salt and mixed peppercorns.
- Tie at intervals with kitchen twine to secure.
- Spritz air fryer basket with cooking spray. Place beef roast in basket and cook for 45 minutes for medium-rare; cook for additional 5-minute intervals for more well-done meat.

Remove beef roast from air fryer and cover loosely with aluminum foil, letting it rest for at least 10 minutes before slicing and serving.
